Short Abstract of Speech

Despite the expanding volume of statutory law, part of it encroaching upon what historically has been common law territory, my impression is that development of common law doctrine in the light of this development has not been extensive as one might have expected. Why is this so? And what are the reasons for it? Is it a product of the differences between common law and statute? To what extent is it influenced by judicial perspectives?

The paper discusses these questions.