

THE FACULTY OF LAW

George Keeton, later to become an eminent and prolific legal scholar, was the first law teacher appointed to the University of Hong Kong - in 1924! The second law teacher followed forty years later, when the Department of Extra-Mural Studies began teaching for the external LLB of London University. That was when Dafydd Evans and John Rear came to Hong Kong. When it was decided soon afterwards to establish an internal LLB at HKU, these two formed the core of the new Department of Law. Bernard Downey was recruited to join them and the Department was launched in 1969 with a quota of just 40 students in the first year. Alan Smith arrived and Leonard Pegg came over from Singapore in 1970, followed the next year by the appointments of Raymond Faulkner, William Stone, and Richard Field. Twelve months later the first Hong Kong citizens - Bob Ribeiro and Ronny Wong - became law teachers in the university, shortly followed by Richard Russell. This was when the Postgraduate Certificate in Laws was introduced. In 1973 four new teachers arrived: Peter Willoughby, Bob Allcock, and two Antipodeans, the New Zealander Barry Lovegrove and the Australian Peter Wesley-Smith.

It is remarkable that so many of these early recruits stayed on in Hong Kong. Downey retired just this year from the District Court; Smith is the managing director of Jardine Fleming;

Wong (presently Chairman of the Bar Association), Ribeiro, Faulkner, and Stone are at the local Bar; Russell is within Johnson, Stokes, & Master, Allcock is Deputy Solicitor General; and Wesley-Smith remained with the university and is now Dean. Willoughby spends half his time in Hong Kong and has a visiting professorship with the City Polytechnic. Evans did not leave until 1990, Rear comes back regularly to persuade local students to enrol in his university in Britain, and Field occasionally visits from the English Bar to appear in the Hong Kong courts. Only Pegg, who is pursuing his musical interests in Britain, and Lovegrove, in a country practice in New Zealand, have not been seen here in recent times.

The first two decades of the Department's history present a story of constant expansion and diversification. The number of students admitted to the first year jumped from 44 to 55 to 70 to 105 to 115 and then in 1986 to 150, its current figure; the PCLL quota is now 200 and is supplemented by students doing an identical course at the School of Professional and Continuing Education within the University. The subjects taught have increased substantially with the availability of options. Teaching staff were recruited from a wider area: more Australians (Susan Kneebone, the first woman appointee; Roderick O'Brien, now a Catholic priest in Adelaide; Philip Griffiths), another New Zealander (John Miller), an Israeli (Roda Mushkat), several Canadians, an American, an Irishman, a few more from Hong Kong (notable among them Albert Chen, now Head of the Department of Law), and more recently teachers from South Africa, Kenya, Tanzania, Sri Lanka, the Philippines, and mainland China. Our latest appointee is Anna Tam, who like Albert Chen and Johannes Chan and several others, is one of our own graduates. The Department of Law, originally belonging to the Faculty of Social Sciences and Law, became a School in 1978 and six years later a separate Faculty with departments of Law and Professional Legal Education. Research degrees, though initially attracting few students, were available from the beginning, and in 1986, a very popular LLM degree was established, followed recently by two Postgraduate Diplomas.

The Faculty of Law reached its optimum size and strength several years ago but is now facing contraction as its budget is likely to be progressively cut over the next few years. Until 1988, when the City Polytechnic began teaching for an LLB, it was the sole provider of legal education leading to a law degree in Hong Kong. Over the last five years we have moved into the K K Leung Building, revamped the LLB curriculum, introduced a unit system,

... THE PAST 25 YEARS

expanded the choice of options for second- and third-year students, further developed the PCLL course, and strengthened relationships with other institutions. Our scholars have produced a large number of books on Hong Kong law and have been awarded several large grants from the Research Grants Council, while the Faculty itself has published a research report, various collections of conference proceedings and seminar papers, a bulletin of Bill of Rights law, and other publications including a regular newsletter. In 1993 it considerably enhanced its role in the management and publication of the Hong Kong Law Journal. Staff are much involved in organisation of the annual Law Lectures for Practitioners and in producing and editing the volume of transcripts. Members of the Faculty are also engaged in law reporting, professional committees, law reform, and the administration of seminars, special lectures, and conferences. Our research and teaching are coming under rigorous scrutiny by the university and the UPGC. We are in the process of establishing a centre for public and comparative law, our unreported judgments database project has been completed, and our Law-on-Line database is rapidly expanding. We've been very busy, and in the next few years we're likely to be busier still. It may be that, after the resumption of Chinese sovereignty, the assumptions which underpin the legal system here will come under attack. This would present a great challenge to the legal profession and to those of us involved in legal education, and we are confident we have the intellectual resources to respond.

For the Silver Jubilee a number of events have been planned. The Alumni will hold a Silver Jubilee dinner. Prior to this alumni dinner the Faculty is hosting the inaugural Eric Au Memorial Lecture (delivered by Sir Robin Cooke, President of the Court of Appeal of New Zealand), and a conference on the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. The Law Association is planning a Silver Jubilee Ball. Still to come are a conference on the Basic Laws of Hong Kong and Macau, held in association with the Institute of Comparative Law in Macau, a seminar on legal education in Hong Kong, and a major conference on "Law and Change in Hong Kong - The Challenges Ahead". On the afternoon of 3 December we will be holding the first separate Law Congregation, with the Chief Justice presiding.

It seems obvious now that the establishment of Hong Kong's first law degree in 1969 was far too long delayed, and it was perhaps inevitable that the school would play a significant role in the legal system. Imagine how the commercial community would have fared in the '70s and '80s without the stream of graduates we produced! Our alumni now number three members of the Legislative Council, four Supreme Court judges, eight QCs, one judiciary administrator and several prominent government lawyers and academics. There was virtually no such thing as secondary literature on the law of Hong Kong until the Hong Kong Law Journal began publication in 1971; now there is too much for most people to hope to read. Without our sustained contribution to the study and teaching of the local law and legal system the process of constitutional and legal reform would have been much more difficult. And imagine how Hong Kong would have faced the change of sovereignty without its HKU law academics and alumni!

It is now without some pride that we look back over 25 years. The Basic Law gives the legal system at least another 50 years beyond 1997, along with academic freedom and autonomy for educational institutions. The Faculty of Law is committed to continuing, its work of analysing, reviewing, critically assessing and teaching Hong Kong law throughout the SAR period.
